Plaintiffs' Position

This letter dispute concerns the Relevant Time Period that should apply to Plaintiffs' discovery requests to ByteDance. After meeting and conferring, Plaintiffs proposed January 1, 2012 through April 1, 2024<sup>2</sup> as the default Relevant Time Period.<sup>3</sup> There is ample support for that default period. By contrast, the period ByteDance proposes—January 1, 2017-February 14, 2023—would shield relevant facts from disclosure for no principled reason.

Importantly, the Defendant here is not TikTok, the platform, but rather ByteDance and its affiliates. Plaintiffs are entitled to take discovery of what the ByteDance Defendants did to develop and test the relevant technologies, their awareness of risks posed by those technologies, and ByteDance's analysis, planning, and goals to target and grow youth engagement. As shown below, the relevant facts on these issues extend back several years before TikTok was launched under that name in the U.S. in 2017. And the relevant facts continue to evolve everyday.<sup>4</sup>

Courts recognize that a defendant's experience with predecessor or related products is relevant to issues such as notice, knowledge of risk, and alternative designs. E.g., In re Welding Fume Prods. Liab. Litig., 2010 WL 7699456, at *19 n.104 (N.D. Ohio June 4, 2010) ("historical documents discovered from defendants . . . dating back several decades" relevant to show defendants' awareness of the dangers of welding fumes "regardless of which welding product emitted them," as well as defendants' knowledge of the effect of failing to warn of the dangers); Kirksey v. Schindler Elev. Corp., 2016 WL 7116223, at *5 (S.D. Ala. Dec. 6, 2016) (evidence of defendant's "foreign designs and the timeframe of their appearance" was "highly relevant" to whether "alternative, feasible designs were available and existed at the time of installation" of the product at issue in the U.S.). Indeed, courts in product liability cases have long held that even evidence of a non-party manufacturer's knowledge of product risks and the efficacy of its warnings may be relevant to a defendant manufacturer's knowledge. Welding Fume, 2010 WL 7699456, at *88-89.

ByteDance Began Designing the Relevant Technology in 2012: ByteDance began designing the core technology that drives TikTok in 2012 by launching the "Toutiao" app. Second Am. Master Compl. (PI) ("PI Compl.") ¶¶ 557, 560.<sup>5</sup> Building on Toutiao's success, ByteDance launched a video app called "Douyin" in 2016. PI Compl., ¶ 558. ByteDance then rolled out a similar app using the new name "TikTok" in 2017. Id. ¶ 559. TikTok [REDACTED]. On April 24, 2024, the U.S. passed legislation labeling ByteDance a "Foreign Adversary Controlled Application" and requiring ByteDance to either fully divest TikTok to a U.S. owned company or cease operating TikTok in the U.S. See H.R. 7521.

Critically, [REDACTED]

<sup>3</sup> Certain of Plaintiffs' discovery requests (e.g., requests for marketing budgets or revenue projections for TikTok) inherently implicate a shorter time period.

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., <https://newsroom.tiktok.com/en-us/more-updates-to-help-the-tiktok-community-create-and-share-safely> (ByteDance April 17, 2024 announcement concerning, among other things, changes to the TikTok platforms purported to create a "safer" user experience).

In short, to understand how ByteDance developed and designed its addictive design, what alternative designs were available and/or considered and rejected, and why ByteDance chose the design it did when it decided to enter the U.S. social media market, Plaintiffs need discovery going back to the beginning of the development and testing of the relevant technology—2012.

ByteDance Developed Its Marketing, Advertising, and Growth Strategy Prior to TikTok’s U.S. Launch: ByteDance’s strategy to target and grow use by teens and kids also is a core issue in both the Personal Injury and School District cases (where this conduct is alleged to have been a substantial factor in creating the public nuisance). Again, even the modest facts disclosed to date show ByteDance’s strategy in the U.S. was informed by and modeled on its strategy and learnings from Douyin going back to 2016. When ByteDance launched TikTok, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. The company spent massively on ads, particularly on platforms like Snap where it could “reach young users.” PI Compl. ¶ 677. This ad buying process “was run from Beijing by the company’s experienced growth hacker teams.” Matthew Brennan, Attention Factory: The Story of TikTok and China’s ByteDance (Oct. 2020), at 258.

TikTok Is Inextricably Intertwined with Musical.ly, Which Launched in 2014: Another important set of facts before 2019 involves Musical.ly, an app that operated from at least 2014–2017.<sup>6</sup> What happened at Musical.ly is relevant for several reasons. First, Plaintiffs allege ByteDance modeled Douyin on Musical.ly, which had tremendous success targeting and building huge numbers of teen and child users. PI Compl. ¶¶ 558–59.<sup>7</sup> Indeed, Musical.ly’s strategy to target children eventually led to a record-breaking COPPA settlement with the FTC. Id. ¶ 573. Second, ByteDance acquired Musical.ly in 2017 for $1 billion and then proceeded to merge Musical.ly into TikTok. Id. ¶ 559. Musical.ly’s founder Alex Zhu is now a ByteDance executive in charge of “Product and Strategy.” ByteDance also incorporated technology from Musical.ly into TikTok. PI Compl. ¶ 631. For example, [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. Given how completely ByteDance incorporated Musical.ly into TikTok—and given Musical.ly’s own track record of ruthlessly targeting kids—there is more than

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiffs’ Requests for Production expressly seek information concerning Musical.ly, as well as TikTok. E.g., Pltfs. RFP Set 4, Definitions (“TikTok Platform” means any version of the Musical.ly or TikTok platform developed, tested, or made available for use, including versions for use on mobile devices or by accessing a URL on the internet, with or without logging into an account, and including all features or surfaces accessible to some or all users of the platform”).

<sup>7</sup> See How a failed education startup turned into Musical.ly (<https://web.archive.org/web/20190111121542/https://www.businessinsider.my/what-is-musically-2016-5/>) (reviewing history of Musical.ly).

ample basis to obtain discovery of what ByteDance learned and likely adopted from Musical.ly's experience and technology for how to target and compel use by children of a short video app.

Discovery of ByteDance Should Run Through April 1, 2024: Finally, as to the “cut-off” date for discovery, the law is clear that discovery does not “cut off” on the date a complaint is served. See Rosales v. FitFlop USA, LLC, 2013 WL 12416060, at *2-3 (S.D. Cal. 2013). Further, where claims involve allegations of ongoing conduct and injunctive relief, discovery through the present is appropriate. FTC v. Precision Patient Outcomes, Inc., 2023 WL 4475604, at *2 (N.D. Cal., 2023); Wilson v. Gaver, 2016 WL 11811706, at *6 (C.D. Cal. 2016). Here, the bellwether Personal Injury Plaintiffs as well as the School District Plaintiffs allege ongoing harm.<sup>8</sup> And ByteDance continues to develop the relevant technology.<sup>9</sup> Nonetheless, Plaintiffs have compromised at April 1, 2024, with allowance for supplementation thereafter for new developments, such as changes to relevant features/policies and ByteDance's responses to legislative bans and safety measures.

TikTok's Position

The TikTok Defendants respectfully request that the Court hold the present “relevant time frame” dispute in abeyance until the Parties complete their discussions over and brief the separate dispute regarding discovery into non-TikTok platforms available outside of the United States. See Joint DMC Statement at 26-28 (ECF No. 750) (describing separate disputes over “Relevant Time Period” and “Outside United States Conduct”).<sup>10</sup>

But if the Court decides it now, it should adopt TikTok's proposed discovery period of January 1, 2017 to February 14, 2023. The date range captures the only potentially relevant period—it spans months before the TikTok platform was available in the United States to the date Plaintiffs filed their Master Complaint. Plaintiffs acknowledge that TikTok was not formed until 2017, and outside of passing references to different platforms like Douyin and musical.ly, offer no allegations related to TikTok from any time period prior to 2017. Sec. Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 554-689A (ECF No. 494). Rather than accept this reasonable position, Plaintiffs have instead spent much effort on

<sup>8</sup> E.g., Case No. 4:23-cv-01584-YGR (PHK), PFS at § VII.A (ongoing addiction, anxiety, depression, and body dysmorphia); Case No. 4:23-cv-05632-YGR (PHK), PFS at § VII.A (ongoing addiction, anxiety, depression, body dysmorphia, binge eating disorder, and sleep disorder); First Am. Master Compl. (School District and Local Government), ¶¶ 29, 194, 247, 997, 1026.

<sup>9</sup> Just yesterday, it was reported that ByteDance has introduced measures to prevent addiction in senior users of Douyin in China. There Is No TikTok in China, but There Is Douyin. Here's What It Is (<https://www.nytimes.com/2024/04/25/business/china-tiktok-douyin.html>). What ByteDance knows about such addiction, why it believes the new measures can and should be targeted to a specific age-group of users to address addiction, and why it chose to roll out such measures only on Douyin and not on TikTok are probative of several core issues in this litigation.

<sup>10</sup> Plaintiffs argue that their need for discovery into non-US platforms including Toutiao and Douyin justifies their demand for an earlier relevant time period. This argument was not previously raised in the April 12 Joint DMC Statement, in the April 19 final meeting of trial counsel (at which the TikTok Defendants' counsel inquired into the basis for Plaintiffs' position on the “relevant time frame,” and Plaintiffs' responded with only vague generalities about “marketing,” “design,” and “pre-launch” materials and broad references to the Master Complaint), or at the April 22 DMC.

detours (a) about different services, (b) arguing the relevance of barred algorithm “design” claims, and (c) distorting the documents they rely on. Indeed, the documents Plaintiffs themselves cite state that [REDACTED].

The Parties’ competing positions. No plaintiff may credibly allege injuries from use of the TikTok Platform (“TikTok”) before its May 2017 launch in the United States. The TikTok Defendants therefore appropriately objected to searching for documents dated before the time TikTok became available in response to Plaintiffs’ over-300 document requests, or dated after the date Plaintiffs filed the Master Complaint in the MDL as the foundation of all claims.

Plaintiffs notified the TikTok Defendants that Plaintiffs would not agree to these limits, and since that time, the TikTok Defendants have exhaustively attempted to meet and confer with Plaintiffs to resolve this dispute, including in letters dated April 3, 12, 13, 17, and 20, 2024; and during six hours of video conferrals on April 3, 9, and 18, 2024. In response, Plaintiffs have declined to negotiate in good faith, contending there is no compromise they will accept: “First, our position is that there is no compromise to offer and that as to discovery prior to launch – it applies across the board. All RFPs unless an RFP states otherwise. I think I made that clear from the beginning on this point.” [April 18 E-mail from M. Weinkowitz to. A. Fiterman.]

In an attempt to avoid Court intervention, the TikTok Defendants have agreed to search for and produce documents dating back to January 1, 2017—more than four months prior to the launch of TikTok. In contrast, only after the April 19 in-person conferral among lead counsel did Plaintiffs put any parameters on their requested timeframe, asserting that “the Relevant Time Period for each RFP begins January 1, 2012,” because they allege that was “the year Defendant ByteDance began designing [its] content recommendation AI;” and “runs through April 1, 2024” subject to “reasonable supplementation thereafter.” [April 24 E-mail from J. Scullion to A. Fiterman.]

Plaintiffs’ proposed time frame seeks irrelevant discovery and is disproportionate to the needs of the case. Plaintiffs do not and cannot demonstrate (as they must) the relevance of pre-2017 discovery in response to any request, let alone “all” 300 of their requests. See RG Abrams Ins. v. Law Offs. of C.R. Abrams, 2021 WL 10312431, at *11 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 22, 2021) (“The party seeking discovery bears the initial burden of establishing relevance.”). On their face, most of Plaintiffs’ requests appear to target discovery from post-launch time periods. See, e.g., RFP Nos. 126-147 (addressing user demographics and behavior, and advertising to kids); RFP Nos. 148-170 (addressing parental controls, user controls, features, terms of service, and warnings); RFP Nos. 171-197 (addressing health and safety efforts, complaints, and CSAM and bad actor reporting); RFP Nos. 198-212 (addressing marketing of platform, lobbying efforts, and industry communications related to platform); RFP Nos. 230-233 (addressing use of platform by students and in schools). Plaintiffs provide no legitimate basis for requiring the TikTok Defendants to search back to 2012, five years before the TikTok platform at issue existed.

Plaintiffs’ proposed time frame is also disproportionately broad and burdensome. Despite the TikTok Defendants’ repeated requests, Plaintiffs have refused to identify any subset of specific requests (out of the 300-plus served) for which Plaintiffs believe they actually need pre-2017 discovery to litigate their claims. They contend only that “it applies across the board.” Plaintiffs must identify the specific pre-launch information that they claim is relevant, and the basis for that claim, before the TikTok Defendants and Court can properly evaluate whether the demand is relevant and proportionate.

Plaintiffs’ reliance on non-US platforms is unripe and improper. Plaintiffs are wrong that an earlier time frame is needed for discovery into different platforms (separate from TikTok), including platforms available only outside of the US. Toutiao and Douyin are not at issue in this litigation in that Plaintiffs do not claim injuries therefrom. Further, they are “profoundly different” from TikTok (Plaintiffs’ words, see Sec. Amd. Compl. ¶ 560 (ECF No. 494)), are not the subject of even a single document request served thus far, and bear marginal if any relevance to Plaintiffs’ allegations against TikTok. Though Plaintiffs argue that these other platforms’ “AI algorithms” may be relevant, the Court has dismissed Plaintiffs’ algorithm-based design defect claims. See MTD Order at 16-19 (ECF No. 430). Even assuming discovery into the TikTok algorithm will be allowed in light of this dismissal (which TikTok opposes), what Plaintiffs appear to be demanding here is different—they want discovery of different platforms’ algorithms, a proposition that goes well beyond what is relevant or proportional to the needs of this litigation. See Hofer v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 981 F.2d 377 (8th Cir. 1992) (information regarding dissimilar predecessor truck models not discoverable).

Plaintiffs cannot invoke musical.ly to expand the relevant time period. TikTok is the only platform at issue in this litigation affiliated with the TikTok Defendants. The fact that TikTok Defendants operated or acquired different platforms does not open the door to discovery of those platforms, nor does it justify expanding the relevant time period for document production in this case years before TikTok was even contemplated. See Barcenas v. Ford Motor Co., 2004 WL 2827249, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 9, 2004) (“To allow ‘discovery of models that are not substantially similar is truly the equivalent of comparing apples and oranges where there are differences between the other models [of a product] and the model at issue.”); Hofer, 981 F.2d 377.

The TikTok Defendants’ proposal allows for reasonable pre-launch design and marketing discovery. The TikTok Defendants have already agreed to produce pre-launch documents beginning January 1, 2017, months before TikTok was launched. A presumptive “relevant time period” that begins on this date will provide Plaintiffs more than reasonable discovery access into these issues pre-launch, and Plaintiffs offer no basis for why they would require discovery from any earlier timeframe—let alone one dating back to as early as 2012. See In re Meta Pixel Healthcare Litig., 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104369, at *8-12 (N.D. Cal. June 16, 2023) (concluding appropriate discovery start date was “the date the Pixel was first launched,” that discovery relating to functionality released after the Pixel launch should start at date of later release, and that while plaintiffs may seek certain discovery before the date Pixel launched it would “depend on the specific requests and the timing of the activities they implicate”); Shijiazhuang Hongray Grp. v. World Trading 23, Inc., 2022 WL 17363907, at *5-6 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2022) (affirming magistrate order precluding discovery into products and time periods not implicated by plaintiff’s complaint). If Plaintiffs determine after reviewing the TikTok Defendants’ production that earlier documents are needed, Plaintiffs can request such information based on actual evidence demonstrating a need, as opposed to just speculation, and the Court will be better equipped to evaluate the relevance and proportionality of Plaintiffs’ demands.

The Court should reject Plaintiffs’ demand for document discovery dating back to January 1, 2012. Further, the Court should adopt the TikTok Defendants’ proposed relevant time period for discovery, beginning on January 1, 2017, and extending to February 14, 2023—the date that the Plaintiffs filed the Master Complaint in the MDL. To the extent discovery reveals a need for an expansion of this timeframe, Plaintiffs can raise and the Court can consider such request at a later time.
